GRADUATE SCHOOL OF HUMANITIES
KYUSHU UNIVERSITY
JAPAN

Foreword

The Humanities Master's Program is centered on the study of Japan's culture. This topic is broadly defined, allowing students the freedom to examine Japan through investigations of history, linguistics, and literature. Our program is designed to be flexible so that each student can specialize (or purposefully choose not to specialize if they wish to pursue interdisciplinary research) in their field of interest.

The program is characterized by:

- 1) Small-group instruction in core subjects, which ensures the acquisition of postgraduate level scholastic abilities.
- 2) A high level of difficulty. Unlike other English language degree programs in Japan, our courses will be comparable in difficulty to master's programs in upper-echelon universities in the US and Europe. Ideally, students with a master's degree from this program should have no difficulty transitioning to a PhD program at—for example—an Ivy League university.
- 3) Individual customization of the program directed towards the achievement of the unique long-term academic goals of each student. For the specialist scholar looking to eventually acquire a PhD, the ability to focus on a particular field of interest will allow him or her to essentially begin an academic career right out of college. Generalists seeking a terminal master's degree can instead approach the program from a "regional studies" perspective. The student does not need to announce his or her choice until arriving at the University.
- 4) Cross-registration in other English language courses provided by other departments. Students will thus be able to pursue specialized training in their field of interest (for example, a student interested in archaeology might take several courses in archaeology in the Department of Social and Cultural Studies).
- 5) Beginning or advanced language training, enabling the student to either pursue advanced academic studies in a Japanese doctoral program or utilize those skills in a workplace environment.
- 6) Expansion of the Kyushu University "Tutor Program" (the regular Kyushu University version is described in the following section). Tutors will be paired with the master's student, and will accompany them to advanced classes taught in Japanese in their field of study in order to introduce the master's student to the Japanese style of academics.
- 7) A closely supervised setting for writing a Master's thesis under the guidance of an academic advisor during the second year of study.

Introduction to Humanities at Kyushu University

The original Faculty of Letters was founded in 1924 by an imperial decree as an adjunct curriculum of the Faculty of Law and Literature of Kyushu Imperial University. It then came into being as an independent faculty in 1949. The Graduate School was later established in 1953.

The School of Letters now offers 21 subjects of study within four disciplinary fields: Philosophy, History, Literature, and Human Sciences. The Graduate School consists of a two-year master's course and a three-year-plus doctorate course in 11 specialized fields including: Philosophy and Ethics, Asian Philosophy, Art Studies, Japanese Culture, Japanese History, Asian History, The History of Western and Islamic Civilizations, Geography, Japanese and Chinese Literature, Western Literature, and Linguistics.

Undergraduate and master's course students are expected to study not only in their major fields but also over a wide range of cross curricular humanities subjects offered by other fields. Programs of study seek to familiarize students with a broad range of fields in the belief that this will contribute positively to the development of individual character.

Our Faculty/Schools have a strong desire to promote international exchange and have recently accepted, mostly into the Graduate School, a larger number of students from Europe, North and South America, Asia and the Pacific regions.

Approximately 10,000 students have now graduated from the Undergraduate and Graduate schools. They are currently, or have been, actively engaged in education, research work, the civil service, business, journalism and various other fields.

Prof. Akihiko Takagi, Dean

An Introduction to Kyushu University

Founded in 1911 as one of Japan's seven Imperial Universities, Kyushu University has established itself as a leader in education and research not just in Japan, but throughout Asia. Currently, it has a total student population of 18,588, of which approximately 6% are international students, and its faculty boasts roughly 2,300 full-time members. Comprehensive in its academic reach, the university has 11 undergraduate departments and 18 graduate schools, as well as numerous affiliated research centers.

In 2011, Kyushu University will celebrate its first centennial, marking its founding as a National Imperial University. We are currently in the process of relocating to the new state-of-the-art Ito Campus, which will, upon completion, provide the university with advanced research facilities that are among the most outstanding in Asia. With the assistance and cooperation received from various friends of the university, we are committed to making every possible effort to promptly complete this relocation.

With the aim of educating new generations of leaders worldwide, we currently offer several graduate programs in English that allow those enrolled to obtain a Master's degree without any prior knowledge of Japanese. To build on our global education concept, we will continue to expand our range of degree programs to be offered only in English. From the Fall Term of 2010 and beyond, the university will launch English-language undergraduate programs in Agriculture and Engineering, and English-language graduate programs in the Humanities, Social and Cultural Studies, Human-Environment Studies, Law Economics, Science, Mathematics, Systems Life Sciences, Medical Sciences, Dental Sciences, Pharmaceutical Sciences, Engineering, Design, Bio-resource and Bio-environmental Sciences, and Integrated Frontier Sciences.

We fully appreciate the fact that, while offering superior education to future generations of world leaders is a start, more is needed to make the most of their studies and research activities. We already have a system in place that provides a variety of services to students and researchers from overseas, and seek to do more. To begin with, each international student will be assigned both a tutor and an academic supervisor. The tutor will greet the overseas student at the airport upon arrival in Kyushu, help the student adjust to life in Japan by providing advice regarding Japanese customs, teach survival Japanese, take him or her on a campus tour, and introduce the student to a community of friends, among many other things. Beyond this, Kyushu University's International Student Center offers services that include cross-cultural counseling to interested students. The Support Center for Students and Researchers from Overseas, whose branch offices can be found on all of the university's campuses, will also assist the university's international population when they need help with translation, with documents for the immigration office or city hall, and more. For international students who wish to find jobs in Kyushu, our career services section can offer assistance.

It should also be noted that Kyushu University's locale—Fukuoka—is an attraction in itself. Fukuoka is a pleasant and cosmopolitan coastal city of 1.4 million residents, and is the largest metropolis on the island of Kyushu. The city boasts a compelling skyline that mixes traditional and modern architecture, numerous upscale shopping malls and boutiques, important cultural and historic sites, and a rich variety of attractions, including galleries, theaters, museums, international cuisine and nightlife, all set against a backdrop of scenic mountains and beautiful seascapes. With an active population of expatriates, there's something for people of all backgrounds in Fukuoka. Geographically and historically, the city has played an important role as Japan's gateway to East and Southeast Asian countries. Indeed, many flights connect Fukuoka International Airport to many of Asia's principal cities (for example, Seoul is 80 minutes away, Taipei is 2 hours away). Fukuoka City enjoys a growing reputation as a modern, vibrant regional trade and production center. Recently Newsweek magazine cited Fukuoka as a 'City of Substance,' ranking it among the 'ten most dynamic cities' in the world.

Diploma Policy

The purpose of the Graduate School of Humanities program in Japanese Humanities is to help students acquire expertise in the field of humanities, including sufficient knowledge and understanding of Japanese culture so that students can become active participants in the international arena. Additionally, the students will engage in deep exploration of the multi-faceted nature of humanity. Based upon that understanding, they will strive to develop their ability to redefine the fundamental problems of human culture as they exist through space and time.

Curriculum Policy

The Japanese Humanities course was created for two types of students: “generalists”, who will obtain a job after obtaining the master’s degree, and “specialists”, who intend to pursue a Ph.D. after obtaining the master’s degree. The curriculum, based on English language classes, has been organized as follows. 1. Trying not to be limited to previously established thinking about courses, we teach students the current and most advanced knowledge of, and methodologies in, the humanities. This is based on having students take a wide range of courses in various fields of the humanities. 2. Through compulsory classes in Japanese culture (philosophy, literature, history, and linguistics) students will acquire a basic understanding of Japanese culture. 3. Specialists in the program may also take a limited number of classes that are taught in Japanese in their field of specialty. 4. Finally, students will write a thesis based on their two years of coursework.

Admission Policy

The Master’s Program in Japanese Humanities for the Graduate School of Humanities seeks students who think logically and are willing to question even the core tenets of their fields of research. Additionally, we desire students who proactively acquire the skills necessary to rigorously and accurately read the huge volume of written knowledge that is our treasured heritage as a species. In order to do so, our students need an insatiable curiosity, a strong interest in languages, a grasp of delicate subtleties, and an open heart towards many cultures.

Regarding the process of selection, our fundamental plan is to accept individuals who agree with our program’s educational philosophy. The ability of the students to think logically and to express themselves in English will be gauged by examining the research plans or essays they present during the admissions process, and during an oral interview.

Eligibility

The applicant for the master's program must hold a Bachelor's degree (or equivalent) by the time the program begins.

Language Requirement

1. All required lectures and seminars will be conducted in English and therefore students are expected to have strong English language skills.
2. There is no prerequisite for applicants to have studied the Japanese language before their arrival at Kyushu University. However, upon matriculation, students will be encouraged to enroll in Japanese language courses.

Application Period

March 1, 2011—March 31, 2011
(Must be received no later than March 31, 2011)

Note: As stated above, all application materials MUST be sent by mail. However, questions about the application process submitted by fax or email are welcomed.

Scholarships

As with all former Japanese national universities, Kyushu University itself does not have any comprehensive scholarship system for international students. There are Japanese MEXT's scholarships, and approximately thirty private organizations provide scholarships for students at Kyushu University. Most of these scholarships can be obtained based on recommendations from each student's present university. After enrollment, students can obtain further detailed information on scholarship opportunities.

However, it is not realistic for international students to assume that they will be able to obtain such scholarship awards unconditionally. The total number of these scholarships is small in comparison to the total number of international students at Kyushu University, and applicants for these scholarships come from all schools at Kyushu University. Therefore, competition for these scholarships is high. For further information about these scholarships at Kyushu University, please click on the "Fees and the Scholarship System in the Guide for International Students" link on Kyushu University's Website.

Therefore, when planning to study and conduct research at Kyushu University, please be sure in advance that you will not encounter financial difficulties. Students are expected to devote most of their time to study and research, and there are also limitations on the amount of time international students are permitted to spend on part-time jobs.

Accommodations

Kyushu University operates a dormitory called the International House (<http://ish.gozaru.jp/>) in Kashii-hama, which is located 3 km northeast of the Hakozaki Campus of Kyushu University. However, due to a shortage of capacity, accommodation cannot be offered to all students. As the term of residence in the House is also limited to a period ranging from one month to one year, most international students rent apartments privately.

International students sometimes have difficulty in finding an appropriate Japanese guarantor. To help solve this problem, there is the Housing Surety System for International Students in Fukuoka. If you cannot find a guarantor and would like to rent an apartment managed by a rental agent who makes use of this housing guarantor system, the Fukuoka International Association can act as a joint guarantor for you. After enrollment, students will be able to obtain detailed information regarding this system.

The living expenses of international students at Kyushu University vary from individual to individual, depending on such factors as their lodgings and eating habits. As a reference, the costs of international student life at a modest but adequate standard are as follows (per month excluding tuition):

Lodging	from 30,000 to 50,000 yen
Food	from 40,000 to 45,000 yen
Academic costs (books etc.)	from 10,000 to 20,000 yen
Miscellaneous	from 10,000 to 15,000 yen
TOTAL	from 90,000 to 130,000 yen

As mentioned in the scholarship information above, it is unrealistic for international students to assume that they will be able to cover all these expenses with scholarship aid, and it is also difficult to arrange a part-time job for many reasons, including the demand of full-time study, as well as visa requirements and laws. Therefore, please secure in advance sufficient financial funds to meet daily living expenses, rent, and tuition fees.
